Solitude, for Powys, is the only way in which we can maintain our dignity in a world out of balance. It is only through withdrawal from society and its follies, its grim demand to keep on smiling in spite of the constant horrors of modern life, that we can reach a state of enjoyment of our own miraculous consciousness.

And this is the philosophy of solitude that Powys sets out of construct. To Powys, solitude is the necessary social, psychological, and intellectual state of the individual. It is social in pulling away from the life and tumult of the crowd (Powys lived for decades in New York City, finally moving to a small town in upper-state New York before returning to Wales a few short years after this book's publication).

Philosophy The terroir of La Solitude is a magical combination of natural and human elements. Here, the plants grow in an area in which every living thing has a role to play: the wildlife and natural vegetation, the vines, and the people. A great wine is created by the vines, without artifice, and tells the story of their setting.
